Social Media affect education system

Preeti Rawat

Did you know how social media affect education? Nowadays social media is quickly evolving in front of our eyes and it almost impossible to reject and hide from this new form of media. Not only is it an important part of socialization within peer group but now it is used to market and motivate people to become a part of a large community. One of the big reason for the strength of students waste their time on phones, computer, laptop and wrong usage of all forms of communication technology. Social media and its network as BBM, WHATSAAP, INSTAGRAM, SNAPCHAT, FACEBOOK, TWITTER, and YOUTUBE the use of the internet as a whole has been major hobby of the youths. Many students waste their time on catting and suffering the internet for non-educative information. They are stick to their phones all day making them lose the sense of time. Some students are also seen pressing their phones during classes, seminars and also in the libraries. They believe their smartphones are catalysts for easy consumption when studying. Youth of nowadays search for information that will not add values of their lives. In current scenario youth studying only for pass an examination and not gain knowledge. This has reduced the vast use and development of the brain. Student who so much dedicated towards on networking have a great tendency of having low grades, poor academic performance and become useless.

The negative impacts should be waste while the positive ones should be uplifted. Time spent on social network sites should be reduced. There should be moderation in student's access to social media. Parents should reduce the hours their children spend in front of Televisions, games and on phones. What they see and browse should be monitored. If possible, the phones should be seized when exams are near. Educative programs and news should be encouraged while immoral scenes in home videos and on the Internet should be preached against. By this, the reading culture will be improved which leads to academic progress. The negative aspects of the social media should be kept from influencing student's education.
